The International Association for the Defense of Religious Liberty (AIDLR) is highly concerned and strongly condemn all kind of intolerance, discrimination, kidnapping, detention, violence, persecution, terrorism, genocide of the Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists, Hindus, Baha'i, atheists, religious minorities and so on – no matter where one tragedy should happens. The AIDLR stresses that all these forms has reached in the XXI Century an unimaginable and unprecedented gravity and can be defeated by a sustained and comprehensive approach.

The current human rights situation requires a common political attitude, unequivocal and coordinated measures of action of different actors. The AIDLR proposes the "Dialogue five" framework: a) diplomats, b) politicians, c) scholars, d) religious leaders, e) civil society non-governamental organizations, working together to all levels: national (Ministries of Justice, Foreign Affairs, Education and Culture), regional (OSCE/ODIHR, Council of Europe, EU) and international (United Nations).

The AIDLR believes that respect for human dignity, fundamental rights, international law and religious liberty according with one's conscience, have to represent for the international community, not only a priority but an urgency; the respect of the life and of dignity of every person, requires a common vigilance and empathy with all those which are suffering no matter the culture, color, background, education, and so on. We love and support the diversity and the culture of respect and we have to do everything for intercultural and interreligious dialogue, for peace, freedom and security.
